Q: How to get a constant stream of bytes? I'm looking for a Java library that can provide a constant stream of bytes to some program I am writing. Basically, I'd like the equivalent of Java's RandomAccessFile. Please not that I'm not looking for a file stream. I'm looking for a stream of bytes. Something that would be nice to have is the ability to provide some pre-defined byte sequences. Is there anything out there? A: This library seems to do what you want: Turning Up the Heat on Victims: The Crushing Injustice of Sex Charges Against Black Men For years, I have been having a private, one-on-one conversation with a black male friend of mine about the prosecution, arrest, and conviction of black men in America. This person is someone I greatly respect, whom I often invite to dinner parties, and who is familiar with the ways that the justice system discriminates against black people. He is someone who has deep empathy and a degree of understanding of the systemic problems of our justice system, but he is not a civil rights attorney, and it would take him too much time to unravel the complex knot of causes and impacts that lead to every case. Nonetheless, I want him to understand a fraction of the causes and impacts of the flawed systems of justice that he knows so well. My friend has said that he once thought that there were only two types of potential black men in America: Those who had killed someone and those who had been accused of killing someone. This was not the case, but it is true that the criminal justice system in America, particularly in the South, has long had a practice of convicting African-Americans on the crimes of violence — murder, rape, assault, kidnapping — even if their victims are white. As this conversation has gone on, I have asked my friend how this happened. He has said that black men are often arrested and convicted by police whose officers, as a result of racism in the courts or in the community, have developed deeply-rooted biases against black people. These biases then become the basis for the police to initiate arrest and prosecution. Because the penalty for carrying a gun is so much harsher than the penalty for carrying a purse, black people often get arrested for carrying guns, even though they are trying to break into an apartment, where they are likely
