Q: Is the returned value of lambda expression immutable? Can I assume that the returned value of the lambda expression $x \Rightarrow x * 2$ is immutable (in-place)? A: No, the lambda expression's value is not immutable, the expression itself is. An immutable expression can be a constant expression, and constant expression might be returned as the result of a lambda expression. A: No, it is not immutable. To prove it, consider some underlying collections: List $x = \text{List.Empty}$; $x = x.ToArray()$; and List $y = \text{List.Empty}$; $y = y.ToArray()$; and consider the underlying list: List If you want to store the lambda expression as "something" to be available for other lambdas, consider the following: Func $f = x \Rightarrow x * 2$; IEnumerable $\text{value} = \text{GetMyValue}()$; $f = f.Compose(\text{value})$; "UpdateException": { "base": "The value specified for the resource is invalid. Either remove the invalid value or try again.", "refs": { } }, "Value": { "base": null, "refs": { "CertificateProfile\$value": "The certificate profile value, including the private key and certificate, in PEM format.", "GetCSRResponse\$csrPem": "The PEM-encoded CSR.", "GetCertificateRequest\$value": "A value that consists of the certificate you want to retrieve, such as arn:aws:acm:us-east-1:123456789012:certificate/12345678-1234-1234-1234-123456789012. The value can be true or false

Q: ASP.Net Core Web API and OData I'm wondering what would be the best approach to expose the data that is being returned from my ASP.Net Core Web API using OData. I have never used Web API OData before, but I think that is the way to go for this, however, I am not sure how to expose my data to the client that is calling the API. My existing setup is a Entity Framework Core server. A: If you use an OData source with ASP.NET Core, the easiest route would be to expose the data using an OData source (OData v4). An OData v4 source would be used when an OData source (v4) is used as the backend for an ASP.NET Core web app. An OData source that works with an ASP.NET Core app is one where an OData v4 endpoint is the only endpoint exposed. The OData source would then be configured with the OData v4 endpoint. If you want to expose the data using Web API, you would need to do it as a REST style service. The advantage of a REST style API is that it can be consumed by clients in a variety of ways, including with the browser and with other Web apps. If you want to use Web API to expose data, you would do so with a simple interface that returns an instance of your entity model. A REST interface would make more sense. If you choose to provide a REST style Web API, the entity model does not need to be fully populated. Only the data you want to share would be exposed to the client. Q: Why "The" here? It's a sentence from the book Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows. It was like a cold steel blade slicing into the side of his throat. Why "the"? I think it can be written as "The blade...." A: The means that you have made a generic statement (the blade) that has a specific target (his throat). "The blade cut into his throat" means the exact same thing, but you have not defined it. The expression you have used provides that definition. The expression can be used in the same way when it refers to specific entities that are very similar, but have a very specific meaning: The knife he is holding is a dagger.
