After passing through the Panama Canal, he crossed the Pacific Ocean to the Galpagos Islands, the Marquesas Islands, the archipelago Tuamotu, Tahiti, Society. In 1768 he sailed around the world, and this time the way was opened to Cape Horn - the southern end of the long journey to the east. Returning to Europe, he brought with him a large number of birds and other animals, which he bred in his garden. It is said of him that he was a "discoverer of lands". He was never the first, but he opened the New World to us, and for this he deserves the respect and gratitude of all mankind. However, not everything in his life was so rosy.
