When manufacturing a tire, for example, raw materials such as a rubber polymer component, carbon black, a filler and the like are mixed into a rubber latex, and the mixture is shaped into a desired form and vulcanized to obtain a tire. While these various kinds of raw materials are mixed into the rubber latex in many cases, it is necessary for the rubber latex to be stabilized so as not to deteriorate before the mixing process. When the rubber latex is mixed into the final product using industrial equipment such as a Banbury mixer, rubber particles precipitate due to the influence of a high temperature or a high shear stress during the mixing. Consequently, clumps are generated and the composition stability deteriorates, and the mixing process cannot be performed efficiently. Thus, it is necessary to obtain rubber latex having excellent stability. For this reason, a method for producing a sintered article for a rubber product, the composition of which is stabilized, is proposed (see, for example, Patent Documents 1 and 2). Meanwhile, in manufacturing a tire in which a reinforcing cord of a plurality of strips is used, a power transmission member formed by sheathing a reinforcing cord with an elastic material is molded around a carcass of a tire. This is a kind of a sintered article for a rubber product, and has excellent initial strength and durability. As one kind of a reinforcing cord material for a reinforcing cord, a metal wire made of a high strength alloy is generally used. Such a metal wire has excellent strength properties. However, it may be difficult to form the metal wire into a circular configuration, and hence it is difficult to handle the metal wire. For this reason, a sintered member for a rubber product is proposed in which an elastic resin layer containing a reinforcing cord and an elastic body are molded around a carcass formed by a resin composition containing a reinforcing cord (for example, Patent Document 3). However, when the reinforcing cord is molded in one surface of a sintered article as in the manufacturing process described in Patent Document 3, bonding between the reinforcing cord and the elastic body deteriorates when kneading the rubber latex in the rubber latex composition. Furthermore, the reinforcing cord protrudes at
