The Toronto-Dominion Bank branch on the main floor of the Richard Eaton Centre in Toronto was temporarily closed this week, while the bank moved its main offices into more modern digs. Those new offices are near the Eaton Centre, just across the street. But the branch on the Eaton Centre's main floor has been closed and marked for demolition in the next two to three months. "They told me they were closing and told me to come back next week to pick up my chequebook," said 64-year-old Margie Powell of Etobicoke. She'd been coming in the branch since she was 15, and says she can't understand why the building is being torn down. "It's just like a little piece of me," she said. "It's my life, you know." The old Richard Eaton location is being demolished and the space is being replaced with a new building. (CBC) (Left) Calgary residents Charles Carson, 44, and Nancy Browne, 30, say they have not been told why the branch is closing. (Right) Rosemary Hogarth, 54, of Toronto, is concerned about the safety of the old branch. (CBC) The branch on the main floor of the Eaton Centre has been closed and marked for demolition in the next two to three months. (CBC) Other customers are wondering about the safety of the branch. On the inside wall, there are posted signs that say 'Waste - placed in the same location before closing of the branch.' Marc Radford,
