Curtis 1314 Pc Programming Station Software 11 ~UPD~

In 2007, the NSA, while asking for emails for a presidential candidate, requested emails for an unknown number of usernames. No one, to date, has specifically asked for emails on behalf of a politician in The United States. The government also has access to cell phone voicemail. If someone else wants to make that case, I'd expect them to do so separately. tl;dr: All of this is for what Snowden is "supposedly" and is best explained by this question, asked by a different party. But it has nothing to do with whether or not they should be doing this. You can ask why they're doing this, but that's very different. A: This is an extraordinary expansion of the authority of the FBI, which are much more clear about what they can and cannot do. I am unclear as to what purpose the FBI would have for doing this -- The Patriot Act only allows the FBI to obtain a warrant and demand documents in the presence of the owner. A: Is it legal? That is not the question at hand. In this case it's questionable if the information is even relevant to the FBI investigation. Are they looking for a specific person or are they just curious? With all that in mind, it might not be that big a deal. What do they need access to? The law and Constitution are pretty clear about what they can and cannot do. Anything that would violate these will be part of this investigation. In the specific case, they can ask for more and more information and data. They can pass on the data to others. They can get access to your phone and your private messages. Why are they asking? They are not specifically asking about the particular case, because there is no "case". It's a witchhunt and they are trying to pull as many people as they can over a broad brush. The more data they can acquire, the more people they can gather. When the Snowden case breaks, the FBI may reveal how they came by the data or if they are really just trying to make a name for themselves. San Francisco -- Three people are dead, and three others were seriously wounded in a shooting at YouTube's headquarters in San Bruno, Calif. police said. The shooting happened at 8:30 a.m. PT (11:30 a.m. ET) at YouTube's headquarters located at 855 Bayshore
