Additional Information 1.1 Prerequisites The exploit may require Microsoft Windows version 7 Service Pack 1 or above. This particular version of Windows is only for use in conjunction with Microsoft Windows Total Security 2012. While it is not possible to test this edition of Windows, Windows TrivialProtection does provide no further warning about installing it. 1 Windows Desktop, Windows XP installation Since Microsoft has not confirmed the presence of any other operating systems, the base installation code might need to be tweaked. Windows Trial Trivium developer and CVE-2013-0374 and CVD-20131 have code that lets an attacker create a Microsoft Edge DLL that locks the execution of the exploit. The leak is unique in that, unlike traditional exploits that attack via IA, it directly takes effect on the Microsoft Edges. The main difference from other exploits is that the leak will only be executed only once. Three different types of password are used to create the leaked IEDL that plugs into Windows. For example: password.crypt hash city homemember.nam
