County coronavirus case in Arizona came hours before three new cases were announced at the state's top-level resort in the White Mountains. The Arizona Department of Health Services announced Saturday that a Phoenix resident was diagnosed with COVID-19, the illness caused by the coronavirus. He arrived at Valley Fever Hospital the day before, the agency said. He was transported to the same hospital where an Arizona man and woman were also diagnosed with the illness. On Saturday, DOH said the man and his roommate have been hospitalized and were likely hospitalized for "several days" as a precaution. The man had some underlying medical conditions. All three had either visited or lived in the Grand Canyon region of L.A. County, where the largest known cluster of coronavirus cases has been recorded. The agency said more cases were being investigated in Arizona, including a person who had been in the Grand Canyon area. "We are investigating additional cases through the L.A. County Health Department," DOH said in a statement. "We anticipate further cases will be identified as other people have contact with confirmed cases." As of Saturday afternoon, the numbers were six cases in L.A. County — four of which have been documented and the four additional cases are still under investigation, said L.A. County public health officer Dr. Barbara Ferrer. On Friday, the L.A. County Public Health Department announced a third case in North Hollywood, a person who visited Laemmle Theatres multiple times and a second case in the San Fernando Valley. In addition to the three cases in the L.A. County region, there are two cases in the Grand Canyon, one in the Colton, California area, and one case in Phoenix. Ferrer said while these were the
