Getting back in to the SF startup scene - minhajuddin Hey guys, While I have been building Saakshar, I have been getting off into side projects and I am not really sure how to get back in the startup scene without doing some sort of proprietary product. So here I am writing to you guys and if you have any advice on the matter, it would be greatly appreciated. ===== prateekdayal You should take the weekend off and go away from your startup :) ----- aniket_ray Start networking. They always need good developers. Make a portfolio. ----- eiji Go work somewhere for a couple of years. Trump, in Room 101 of the UN's palatial headquarters on East 68th street, declared that his popularity has risen "because people see me as the least racist person there is in the world, that is the least racist person there is in the world." He was referring to himself, I assume. What will it take to get Trump to stop saying things? I think one way to get him to stop saying things might be to force him to stop saying them. Think about it.

MicroRNA, tumor and metastasis: alterations in vesicle-mediated transport and subcellular trafficking of proteins. MicroRNAs are non-coding RNA species that are involved in a number of cellular processes, most of them being related to cancer development and progression. Recent studies have implicated microRNAs in the regulation of a wide spectrum of cellular functions, including those related to vesicular transport. It is becoming increasingly clear that alterations in the transport of proteins and/or lipids can induce a wide spectrum of alterations in the intracellular signaling. It is therefore of the utmost importance to delineate the microRNA-related changes that occur in protein trafficking and localization. In this review, the authors focus on how microRNAs may play a role in the organization of the vesicular trafficking machinery. The information provides a framework for understanding the mechanisms involved in microRNA-related changes in protein trafficking and localization and may unveil new insights into the pathophysiology of cancer and metastasis. The invention relates generally to a positioning system for an automotive vehicle such as an automatic transmission and a planetary gear set. A typical transmission has a torque converging device such as a torque converter or a multi-disk friction coupling, a multiple-step transmission gear mechanism which is accommodated therein, and a multi-plate clutch for stopping rotation of the torque converging device. The torque converging device is mounted on a rotating shaft of a power source. The rotating shaft is subject to various vibrations and oscillations. These vibrations and oscillations will be transmitted to the torque converging device, which will shake up the transmission. In some cases, the transmission may be forced to fully disengage, with the resulting loss of speed of the vehicle. The present invention seeks to provide a positioning device for a torque converter of an automatic transmission, which prevents the rotational angle of the torque converter to be reduced in spite of oscillations of the transmission. One aspect of the invention provides

The c-erbB-2 gene encodes the epidermal growth factor receptor (EGF-R), a membrane receptor which is implicated in tumor development of human esophageal epithelial cells. Aberrant methylation of the promoter region of this gene has been observed in some other carcinomas. We analyzed the methylation status of the c-erbB-2 gene in an esophageal epithelial cell line TE-1 in which neoplastic transformation has occurred after long-term cultivation. The methylation of the promoter region was examined by the restriction enzyme-mediated methylation assay. The methylation was detected in TE-1 cells, but not in TE-1 derivatives, TE-1-2T1 and TE-1-2T2 which were established after transfection with a temperature-sensitive replication factor C mutant gene. These results suggest that the methylation of the promoter region of the c-erbB-2 gene may occur in neoplastic transformation of human esophageal epithelial cells. Q: C# Exponential Decrease I'm trying to do an exponential decrease method in C#. I want to decrease the number 10 by 1 every 10 seconds until it's 0.
