CccDNA represents the most stable form of the viral genome in the hepatocyte nucleus. It is preferentially replicated and encapsidated during the HBV life cycle.

Although many mechanisms have been reported to regulate HBV cccDNA levels, whether the transcription of the viral genome, encoded by the cccDNA, could also contribute to this phenomenon remains unknown. In this issue of SciELO Open, Mendez-Lago et al. (2018) investigated whether cccDNA-encoded proteins could interfere with HBV transcription. The main observation of this study is that the levels of proteins encoded by the HBV cccDNA increased during the HBV life cycle, and this increase was associated with a significant reduction in HBV transcription. It was demonstrated that the HBV cccDNA-encoded proteins are involved in the regulation of HBV transcription, through the repression of both basal and inducible transcription. This study therefore provides evidence that proteins encoded by the HBV cccDNA interfere with HBV transcription. Further experiments will clarify whether these proteins are direct repressors of HBV transcription or whether they mediate transcription through other proteins. Recent studies have identified that, in the liver, the low-level viral replication of HBV persists as a covalently closed circular DNA (cccDNA) that represents the genome of the encapsidated virus, which persists in the hepatocyte nucleus. These cccDNA molecules are not transcribed into mRNA or proteins, and are replication-competent templates for the synthesis of viral DNA. This cccDNA pool is a reservoir for viral reactivation in patients with chronic HBV infection, and cccDNA ca3bfb1094

It can be quite messy, but they all wash out. * You might find that, when removing the MofP or bladder from the other part of the Bladder, the other part of the bladder will just slide out (even though you have squeezed tight). This is fine - you can leave it in the Bladder. Just be careful when you put it back in. * Any notes, pictures or charts of parts of this Bladder are my own.Q: SubSonic 2.1 upgrade causing loss of sessions? When upgrading to SubSonic 2.1, we're seeing that we're losing our session when redirecting. This doesn't occur when upgrading from SubSonic 2.0. The issue here is that we're redirecting from one page to another, and that redirect is losing the session. public ActionResult Page1() { Session["SomeKey"] = "A value"; return RedirectToAction("Page2",
