If a script has no question, it can be accessed using the Load Script command, which searches for a script in the list of installed scripts. The player may need to manually create a new text document or document with a new name, but the command preserves the document's existing formatting and characters. The command also opens each script as a new document, preserving the page formatting. The Player commands have been updated to use the new Type library. The Display and Print commands now work in multiline text documents. The Save as PDF command now works with multiline documents. The gs command now creates a multiline text document, preserving the formatting and line breaks in the document. The Load Script command has been renamed to Add Script to Storyboard, and now works properly with text documents. The user can now edit a script directly from the Text editor and see the results. The View as Text command now works in multiline text documents. The Display command now preserves line breaks in multiline documents. The Make Storyboard command now creates a multiline text document, preserving formatting and line breaks. The output from the Run Command option is now automatically centered in the active window.
