I wanted the class to be fun and conversational, so I decided not to be the usual grammar/English teacher and I just spoke as naturally as possible. However, as a result, I ended up sounding like a cocky, gigantic ass. As we covered broken windows, the noise of things being tossed, etc., I had a little moment of panic. How am I going to convey the idea of a frugal family without sounding like we just spend money on whatever we fancy? This is something that's been on my mind for a while, but I keep thinking that I have an advantage because I am just naturally frugal. I never go into debt because I just don't need to. However, I've identified two problems with my "I'm naturally frugal" frame: 1. I am not actualy a frugal person; I just live frugally. By the time I spend money on a tv, I've already spent money on eating, shelter, entertainment, etc. So I'm looking at the spending purely for entertainment and not for… well, you know… making me things. 2. I'm not actually frugal. Anyone who has been following my blog and may have emailed me already knows that I am currently dealing with some pretty big unforeseen problems, and that I'm finding things aren't cheap and aren't easy. When you see people who would sound "frugal" as a nice person – people who live in a creative and non-toxical way – you are seeing a different
