Monster Dungeon is an action puzzle game where you move a monster around to clear the obstacle in front of it. The monsters consists of 2 tiles; one tile for the left hand side of the monster and the other tile for the right hand side. Every monster has a certain skill level. If the monster has the skill level of 3 - 7, then when it moves, the tile is chosen at random from the left hand side and the tile is chosen at random from the right hand side. Your goal is to clear all of the level by moving the monsters around. You would imagine it would be easy to simply clear the level, but your monsters have weaknesses, traps, obstacles, etc. They can't pass through most of them, and you would have to clear them away.

The game is controlled via touch screen of the Monster Dungeon Player. Each tile is roughly 6 pixels so you could easily mistake a tap from the right tile side to a tile on the left tile side, which would negate the effectiveness of the skill level.

When the level is cleared, you simply place the Scrapbook and Tap (puzzle) Mode tokens randomly to generate

What's new in Doki Doki Literature Club!:

in Christ, Dear friends and family, This message is written for you as I stand with you and lift up your sacrifices! Even as we utter the words “For the next three hours, you will feel like a soggy piece of stale bread!” I pray the goodness of our merciful Father in choosing to abide among us, even with the evil of sin bringing judgment upon us, As the Qur’an teaches “We shall fill Hell with jinn and mankind, bringing the promise and warning of God.” (9:128) Ahhh, I love that verse! I love it because it is a deceptively simple all-inclusive verse that pretty much sums up all of human action. When I was about three years old, my grandma came home from church one day when I was like, 2 years old. She began chatting with me and telling me a story from her parish. This was the story of the “Potato Bug”. It goes like this: A tweedle-dyed self-righteous Calvinist walked up to God, and asked “Why on Earth did you make man?” And God said, “Why not? It is the most idiotic waste of time, bother, and brain matter that there is.” And then God went back to his task of creating the Milky Way galaxy, which was then hardly begun at all. And in a few billion years, the Milky Way will have been completed, and will have begun to come to an end. And as the last great Cosmic energy galactic fireworks, it will suddenly be bursting and sucking in matter, people and planets. And just as a rocket is sent into orbit to begin its journey to the stars, men, women and children, will now be sucked into a wall of pure cosmic energy and released to eternity. And thus we will be born. At the time I heard the story, it had seemed so perplexing and strange to me. I knew my mother’s family was very religious, and I didn’t understand why God had done this. I didn’t understand how much work this God seemed to be putting into the task of creating us. And then it dawned on me: what a gift! We all think we have free will and that we choose to wear jeans or dresses or long
