The most recent Credibility Scorecard of perception of IAS by the public and private sector now finds that the BJP has lost all credibility. This is the most shocking in the history of a party that has governed India for over a decade. Thought leaders have been discussing the importance of perception in elections, but now that the perception of the government by the largest and oldest organization of economists in India is quite low, do the perception scores of the past for other institutions deserve a revisit? The perception score of The Reserve Bank of India (RBI) has been steadily rising since January 2013, when it began to rise by 1 or 2 points. In August 2014, it stood at 40 percent and in September it went up to 46 percent. Then in October 2014, it slid to 33 percent when the government suffered its first defeat in parliament, and then went up by another 4 points in November. It has been steady at 50 percent since then and has now gone up to 54 percent since the Modi government came to power. This means that the perception of the RBI by the public has gone up 7 points since the government came to power, which is a good thing. However, only the government is worrying about inflation, which is not mentioned by the RBI people.
