The present invention relates to a new and improved method of, and apparatus for, controlling the rotation speed of a web-like sheet material like a paper web or a corresponding cardboard web by the selective transfer of a two-layer flow of fluid to the web-like sheet material during its travel between a plurality of rolls. In its more specific aspects, the present invention particularly concerns a method of, and apparatus for, controlling the rotation speed of a web-like sheet material as it is being guided by a plurality of rolls. In particular, the invention is concerned with a method of, and apparatus for, controlling the rotation speed of a web-like sheet material when such sheet material is being guided by the rolls in a machine or apparatus for producing a web-like sheet material containing fibrous material on a paper machine or a cardboard machine. It is known to control the rate of the rotation of the winding rolls in a paper machine in order to be able to manufacture paper having different physical parameters, such as different weight and/or thickness, or with the aim of changing the fibre orientation. For example, in U.S. Pat. No. 2,747,706, granted May 29, 1956, there is disclosed a method and apparatus for controlling the speed of travel of a paper web during the production thereof. The paper web is pressed against a number of rolls disposed between a headbox and a take-up roll. A valve or similar control device is associated with each roll in order to control the volume of fluid discharged by each valve to the paper web. When the amount of fluid ejected from the valve is greater than a predetermined value, the associated roll rotates faster than when the
