

Fifa 22 Cracked Version introduces “HyperMotion Technology,” which uses motion capture data collected from a real-life football match in motion capture suits. The tools introduced in FIFA 22 will be displayed in the video player on FIFA.com (screenshots are below). “HyperMotion” is available for the first time in the Ultimate Team mode, presented as a group of customisable aspects. The new features are based on the same underlying core technology that powered the on-pitch movements of the players and faithful recreations of the authentic, real-life abilities of each player. FIFA 20 was crowned the global sports game of the year in December 2019, while FIFA 17 was crowned the global sports game of the year in February 2018 and FIFA 14 won the title in March 2013. With the release of FIFA 21 just around the corner, fans can look forward to a new chapter in the EA SPORTS FIFA series – from the pitch to the virtual pitch and beyond. In-game summary What is “HyperMotion”? Developed using motion capture data collected from real-life players, “HyperMotion” is activated in the Ultimate Team mode, which is presented as a group of customisable aspects. The “HyperMotion” tools make it easier for players to create and share their very own customised player profiles in the new “MyPlayer” tool, which will be introduced in FIFA 22. Players can also use these tools to customise the squad of their favourite team in Ultimate Team mode. How does “HyperMotion” work? The movement of the player in-game is powered by motion capture data collected from real-life football matches. Using the data from the recorded matches, FIFA 22 captures the player’s movements in “real” game-like situations – between headers, tackles, positioning and reacting to opponents. As with the real player, the in-game movements of the player can be transferred to any different camera angle, as the player’s on-pitch movements are locked into the exact place, time and scale of the recorded data. “HyperMotion” requires a minimum of four motion capture suits and compatible players to be tracked. How does “HyperMotion” impact on-pitch movements of the player? The “HyperMotion” technology takes the movements of 22 different players playing a match in real-life motion capture suits and transfers those movements to the in-game model
