HyperMotion Technology is the result of more than 3 years of research and development and is described as “the most sophisticated Player Impact Assessment system in the history of football.” Powered by this technology, actions such as kick-ins, chip plays, and backheel passes are more realistic and harder to predict, giving more freedom and control to the player in the decision-making process. On-ball movements have been expanded beyond the bounds of a traditional player model, including new animations for set-pieces and motion-captured dribbles. The system also now

mimics the behavior of players wearing under-suits, allowing players to morph into any player type – whether naturally you are a wingback, centre forward or full-back – at any time, using a variety of animation options. To prepare for the new technology and allow the development team more time, teams across the world participated in FIFA 21 scenarios to research and discover ways in which this technology could be applied. The FIFA team used this data to inform and evolve the system further, creating innovative new gameplay elements and new player abilities based on real-life player data. “HypeMotion has enabled us to put in more passion and energy into our gameplay,” said Christian Ramirez, FIFA 22 Gameplay Lead. “For me, a key point about the game is that I feel like my teammates have more control. I’m able to control the options I choose for each scenario, and that’s what makes the game feel livelier. You can hold off on the tackles, making more passes, moving away from the challenge. It’s great feeling. You’re not given the ball and told to go on. You’re given a chance to create with your teammates.” The new “Player Impact Experience” gives a richer and more realistic result of what happens to your player in a tough situation and it is grounded in real life. Players’ physicality has been greatly expanded, as the game allows you to see bruising on the players' faces, as well as differences in where they are starting to break down. For instance, if a player misses a tackle and then struggles to keep his balance, the gameplay models will carry this. One element that was refined and rewritten from the start of development was the Player Health System. Now players are put into a state of exhaustion that affects the passing game, and the player movements
