FCC Chairman Julius Genachowski on Tuesday unveiled new rules in an effort to make the Internet more secure for consumers. In a speech at the Consumer Electronics Show, Genachowski announced new policies that would require broadband providers to notify their customers when they want to sell their personal information to third parties. This information could include a user's name, e-mail address and phone number. Genachowski also hinted that the FCC is considering imposing "new network security safeguards," according to an FCC official. Many broadband providers are already required to adopt security measures designed to protect their customers' personal information from data breaches. These include strong encryption, robust passwords and third-party audits. The new rules, however, would strengthen the relationship between broadband providers and their customers by requiring they notify customers more often when they want to sell their data. If a broadband provider does sell a customer's personal information, it would be required to inform customers that it did. Broadband providers would also be required to clearly disclose the cost of the service and the fees they are charged. The FCC is also considering rules that would require broadband providers to pay consumer rebates to reduce the cost of Internet access, the official said. This would require broadband providers to make Internet access more affordable for their customers. The new policies would also require that broadband providers make "reasonable efforts" to prevent the unauthorized use of consumers' wireless devices, such as for eavesdropping. The new policies, however, don't apply to wireless Internet access. For that, the FCC will continue the current rules that apply only to home phone lines. Some consumer advocacy groups have said the FCC's previous rules don't do enough to protect consumers' privacy. Advocacy groups called for greater consumer protection when Congress passed the Fair Information Practice Principles for the first time in 2006. This led the FCC to adopt rules requiring that the terms and conditions for broadband providers be made available to customers. A 2007 amendment to the privacy rules gave the FCC authority to require broadband providers to notify customers when they want to sell their personal data. The new policies seek to ensure that the consumer notification requirements apply to a wide range of providers, including mobile broadband providers that give their customers Internet access through a laptop. Government agencies are working with ISPs on the new rules, which were first proposed in January. The agency will take public comment on the proposal for 30 days, after which it will be finalized. Home

John McCain has a new endorsement from a provocative Pennsylvania governor. On Friday, the GOP presidential candidate announced that he received the backing of Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Corbett, who is the first sitting governor to endorse a candidate in the primary season so far. "I believe I am the right candidate to make change in Washington and turn around our economy. My campaign has provided Pennsylvania taxpayers with a full record of my business experience and proven results," Corbett said in a statement. "It is time to hold Washington accountable for its past actions and give Pennsylvania a fresh start." Corbett, who is easily re-elected to a second term in November, is seeking his party's nomination in the race. Earlier this month, Mitt Romney had the backing of 10 governors. Corbett joins the ranks of those seeking the Republican presidential nomination. The Arizona senator is seeking the nomination of the Republican Party. Corbett is considered a potential vice presidential candidate in a Mitt Romney-led ticket. McCain, who is in Iowa to campaign for the Federal Aviation Administration, is having his presidential campaign renewed as he seeks to win the support of the party's influential 2008 "electoral college primary" voters.
