candidate at the Democratic National Convention this week. He delivered the only speech, and the only televised speech, that no one watched. Kamala Harris, who had one of the most successful launch stanzas of any 2020 Democrat, spoke poorly for over an hour. Cory Booker gave yet another awful speech, as did Elizabeth Warren. But only Sanders had an underwhelming performance. Sanders spoke for a little over an hour and a half, and dominated the evening. He gave a decent speech at first, delivering an address on the Trump economy. But he quickly lost his way, talking about the greatness of Trump, the nominee's ties to black civil-rights leaders, and other Democratic Party talking points. Sanders spoke more about Trump than he ever has in his political life. He said, "What the president of the United States is trying to do is divide this country up." He said, "I am not an anti-Trump candidate. I'm a pro-people candidate." And, "Donald Trump is a phony and a fraud, who holds up a picture of a crowd and claims it's all of us." Sanders even invoked the black civil
