U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,154,331 and 3,871,826 disclose continuous laminating apparatuses for applying hot melt adhesive to the sides of food products such as sandwiches. However, these and similar prior art machines use multiple mechanisms to continuously convey, heat, and apply one or more thermoplastic materials to the sides of food products. Continuous machines for packaging one or more viscous materials into a plurality of food packages or sandwiches are also known. U.S. Pat. No. 3,995,550 shows a continuous package filling machine that applies one or more viscous materials to a plurality of food packages in a horizontal stack. The packages are fed through the machine in an inverted condition. One or more gates hold the packages on a conveyor which vertically orientates the stacks and directs them into a pair of continuously driven conveyor rolls. In the patented machine, the viscous material is forced through a nozzle.
