a magnacalis_ are greyish in appearance, and more complexly zygomorphic, with the posterior margin slightly concave and the forewing very distinctly zygomorphic. Red Tali _Margariphas flavidorsalis_ (Frey, 1912) is similar in appearance. Structure and markings The anterior half is deeply green, with a very broad blackish brown mark across the centre, with small green terminal spots. There are a few small discal marks between the blackish blotch and the costal margin, which are white. The hindwing is broadly green. There is also a broad blackish base and a row of black dots across the outer margin of the hindwing. Flight period May to August. Habitat Otago meadows with patches of grass and feather grass. Comments The Bands also has four other race forms, which are very similar: compare red, blue, green and dark brown. The red race is bright red with thin, dark veins and it is fully dingy. Further reading Watt & Fan in _Butterflies of Britain and Europe_ (1983) gives a long description of the species, but the illustrations only show the Bands and white forms, which are very similar. Red Tali _margariphas flavidorsalis_ Reference Watt & Fan in _Butterflies of Britain and Europe_, 1983 Red Tali _Margariphas flavidorsalis_ Habits/activity Resting with one front leg raised. Females are very rarely collected, perhaps from second year moths. Flight period Apr to Nov, depending on location. Habitat Grassy, wet conditions with large patches of grass and feather grass. Comments The main red form of the Red Tali is quite rare, and generally abounds in places like Hutt Valley, an area surrounded by forest with large patches of grassland. Only the Northern Zealander (_naodinga_) begins similar windswept grassy conditions in April through to September. Even this can be preceded with a fickle spring only few days.
