The cable network has ordered six episodes for the series, which will return for a sixth season in 2014. "Sons of Anarchy" was created by Kurt Sutter, who also created "The Shield," which ran on A&E for four seasons before moving to Fox. Each year, the action-adventure drama chronicles the outlaw biker club SAMCRO, based in Charming, Calif. The series features a mix of bikers, gun-toting women, free love and crime, along with drugs, murder, betrayal, sex and violence. "Sons of Anarchy" has been a ratings success for the network. In the most recent season, which ran until the fall, the show averaged a 1.4 rating in adults 18-49 and 4.2 million viewers, in the pre-prime time Tuesday time slot, the best performance in the time period for the network, the network said. The second season averaged a 1.1 in the same demographic and 2.7 million viewers. The 2011-12 season averaged a 1.4 rating in the time slot, with 3.7 million viewers, the best performance in the pre-prime time Tuesday slot for the network in nearly three years, the network said. The first season of "Sons of Anarchy" did not premiere until May, but received strong reviews for its stark depiction of the Oakland-based motorcycle club. The past season is also the first time that the franchise has been shot for A&E. "We couldn't be more proud to have aired the series in front of 'Roots,' 'Hatfields & McCoys' and the other American classics on our network over the past two years," said A&E Networks chief creative officer Chris McCarthy.
