The Texas Department of Criminal Justice (TDCJ) and the Tarrant County District Attorney's Office confirmed Wednesday that they had searched the Central Texas Regional Jail in Diboll, TX, searching for an unspecified quantity of synthetic drug compounds. According to TDCJ spokesman Jeremy Desel, authorities were unable to find the substances, nor were they able to trace where they came from. Officials say the search did not produce any major health problems, but they also note that it was conducted in an "acutely dangerous" facility where drug users are detained. A spokeswoman for the Tarrant County District Attorney's Office, Tracy Grant, told CBS News that the officials responsible for the search are still investigating to determine if any crimes were committed. A TDCJ spokesman said the synthetic drugs were not illegal in Texas and that the substance originates from China and other countries. "We have no national policy that regulates the flow of narcotics into the US, and the amount of heroin and fentanyl flowing into the U.S. is enough to have a major effect on the need to hospitalize individuals suffering from drug overdoses," Desel told CBS News. Desel said that the Tarrant County jail system reports inmates for drug violations.Obama's One Last Hail Mary Campaigning on a promise to make government "work a
