“We have been recording a lot of live motion capture data from the real life players while playing a high intensity football match,” said Alexander Limberis, SVP of in-game technology at EA Sports. “By combining the actual live data with our motion capture pipeline we can create a very realistic, authentic and exciting soccer experience for the player and create an amazing experience for fans around the world.” “One of our core values at EA is to create games that are fun for the players,” said Andrew Wilson, in-game director at EA Sports. “We don’t just want to create the best soccer game, we want to create the best soccer game for the players. By gathering real-time data from 22 players, we are bringing the fun and authenticity of the sport to the players themselves so they can have their very own high-intensity football game experience, where they can control the match like never before.” The final version of the game features nearly 200 different player celebrations - including a new jumping Trumpet, Fanfare, and Wiggle. In addition, players can toggle the animations of existing celebrations (such as the tackle, off the ball running with the ball, and jump) between normal, high-energy, and off. There are more than 50 new goal celebrations and 20 new goal animations - including an impressive Spectacular Spin. FIFA 22 introduces a new and expanded passing tutorial feature. The Passing Manager provides guidance on the best way to execute passes through the lines of the defense, and can be accessed with a single button press. The player can see all areas of the pitch and pick up areas that are important to complete a successful pass. Similar to the new tutorial feature introduced in FIFA Ultimate Team, the Passing Manager is designed to be the first step to learning and mastering how to play the game. FIFA 22 introduces the Corner Kick Return System, which allows players to use their goalkeeper as a decoy to set up a successful header from the corner of the pitch. “We’re a big fan of soccer analytics,” said Ian Carter, EA SPORTS’ senior gameplay director. “Our new corner kick return system allows us to expand the gameplay of the corner kick to give the defenders and goalie a better chance at either winning the ball back or creating a better shot.” FIFA 22 introduces a “Smart Patrol”
