I wrote some javascript code in Silverlight application, and it worked well on IE11(on Windows 8.1, 64-bit). So I wonder, is it possible to use the Flash plugin for Silverlight application? and if it is, can anybody give me some suggestion? Thanks. A: yes it's possible. flash is the same language that silverlight uses but as @Michael mentioned it's just a VM and you're code will run just like any other normal application. if you use Expression Blend or VS2010 you can create silverlight app. if you use 2008 you must use VS2008. and yes you should create normal asp.net web app instead of silverlight app Unlike the Ducks, the Dolphins were never a team that could throw a scare into the Titans, who finished their first season in Tennessee with a 15-1 record. But the Dolphins gave them a challenge. In 2003, the Dolphins finished first in their division with a 10-6 record and earned a first-round bye in the playoffs. Going into the second round, the Dolphins were riding high, and the Titans were 4-13. The Dolphins won the game and the series, 42-14. Now, a decade later, the Dolphins are barely hanging on. They finished third in the division, with a 6-10 record. The Titans are on their way to the playoffs. McNair missed the second half of the Titans' final game against the Colts last week because of a thumb injury, but he's expected to play Sunday against the Dolphins. The Titans were 11-point favorites in the first meeting between the teams two years ago, but they failed to cover the spread as the Dolphins put up 35 unanswered points to win. The Titans were blown out 45-3 last Sunday by Houston. Titans running back Chris Henry said he has received plenty of coaching this week about what to do to prepare for the Dolphins. "I think they're a good team," Henry said. "They did a good job of focusing in the offseason. They're definitely a
