Photoshop is a raster graphics editor. It does not understand vectors, and it's not possible to edit typographic text in Photoshop unless you use a vector graphics editor (like Adobe Illustrator). Photoshop has many different tabs that perform different functions. The most common tabs are used to create layers, flip and rotate an image, and edit the color, contrast, and saturation of an image. + ![[Image:PhotoshopResume.jpg]] − == Creating a Layer == − A layer is a selection in an image that enables you to change the appearance of an image without modifying the original. To create a new layer, choose Layer > New or press Shift+Ctrl+N (to create a new layer in a new empty file), and Photoshop will create a new empty file with a new layer. + == Creating a Layer == + A layer is a selection in an image that enables you to change the appearance of an image without modifying the original. You have a limited number of sliders to work with to change these parameters. + − + − You can use the color wheel for adjusting color, and the Hue/Saturation adjustment to adjust the contrast and saturation. + − + − To modify the colors in your image, click the eyedropper and drag it over the colors you wish to change. You can click on the color to bring up a color palette for selecting the color, or just click on the color square. To adjust the color, use the buttons on the color wheel or adjust the sliders in the Hue/

While there are many quality alternative editors for photographers such as Silver Efex Pro, the reason Photoshop Elements continues to hold a strong monopoly is because it can be used by almost any graphic designer. From the very first version, Photoshop Elements (version 6) has been created with the intention of incorporating all the graphic design functions and functions of a professional-grade graphics editor. Modern Photoshop Elements is powerful and sophisticated, providing features for graphic design, but it can also be limited if you are using a full-fledged professional-grade editing software such as Photoshop. If you want Photoshop Elements but you also want to edit images using a professional-grade workflow then you should consider a full-fledged Photoshop alternative, such as Lightroom CC. However, if you work only with images, like a web designer or photographer, then Photoshop Elements is your best pick. Hopefully, Photoshop Elements 15, the latest update to the online and offline versions of the software, will be the best version yet. What's New in Photoshop Elements 15? As you can see in the screenshot below, the interface has undergone some major changes: The navigation menu is easier to use, the default navigation tree is more convenient and you can more easily change the size of the editing window. Image Adjustment tools You can easily adjust the image brightness, contrast and color in the Lightroom-like panel. Photoshop Elements allows you to adjust brightness, contrast, sharpness, saturation, hue, color, and skin tone and much more. When you're editing a set of images, the Photoshop Elements panel offers you several different options to quickly access all the adjustments and tools related to the task at hand. For instance, in the image below, you can adjust the brightness and contrast of each of the three images. Curves: The most versatile color tool Color tools For a long time, Photoshop Elements users had only a limited range of options to adjust color tones (such as hue and lightness), saturation, and contrast. The latest update of the web and offline version allows you to adjust multiple colors in a picture. The curves palette The curves palette helps you adjust the brightness and contrast of images. The more you go left or right, the more or less contrast the image gets; whereas going up or down will increase or reduce the brightness. Curves can be used to make 05a79cecff

The top-selling sporting brand will sponsor Longboat National Bank Stadium, which will open next season. Under Armour is celebrating the London Olympics, as the leading American sportswear company plans to join Nike in sponsoring the velodrome at the Olympic Park in Stratford. Approaching the start of the 2016 Olympic Games, The Baltimore Sun reports that Under Armour, which is the world's largest provider of athletic footwear and apparel for sports, will become the official sporting brand of the Olympic Park velodrome, which is set to open for the Games next summer. The company is the largest sponsor of the Olympic Games in its 30-year history and joins Nike, which sponsors 15 of the Summer Games. "Under Armour's deep commitment to the London Games extends beyond the velodrome," said Roger Adams, managing director of Under Armour Europe. "We're proud to have the opportunity to be at the heart of the action in our role as the Official Athletic Brand of the Olympic Park. Working with all the great athletes, teams and partners to help be part of London 2016's gold-medal story is an opportunity we're extremely excited about." The partnership marks Under Armour's first-ever pitch to the worlds of sport and fashion. The company aims to bridge the gap between the two worlds by using the Olympics as a platform to launch a broader range of products at different price points. In June, the company secured a deal with the International Paralympic Committee, allowing it to become the official outfitter for the Paralympic Games. In conjunction with this, it will become the presenting sponsor of the 2016 Paralympic Games—which are scheduled to take place in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil—and will be the official outfitter for the Paralympics in Rio. The Baltimore Sun's report comes just hours after a report from Sports Illustrated that Under Armour had reached an agreement with NBC to become the first official uniform supplier to the 2016 Rio Olympic Games. Under Armour will be able to provide uniforms for the U.S. Olympic Team, the U.S. Paralympic Team, and the British Olympic Team. The company will be the first third-party uniform supplier in more than 50 years. "We're thrilled to bring the 2016 Rio Olympic Games, including the U.S. Olympic Team and U.S. Paralympic Team, under the Under Armour flag," said Steve Gaut, president and chief executive officer of Under Armour. "This
