Tip Photoshop CS3 and GIMP 2.8 work together well. You can install both. Start with Photoshop and move to GIMP as necessary. In this book, we'll be using Photoshop CS5 and GIMP 2.8. ## Starting with a Blank Canvas You are not required to purchase Photoshop to create images in this book; however, you do need to be comfortable using a computer and a mouse. If you have no previous knowledge of Photoshop, you might want to download a trial copy and work through a few tutorials to get your feet wet. Once you're comfortable with the basic features, you'll quickly start to enjoy the many features and streamlined workflow. The next section introduces you to the basic features and key terminology of Photoshop. If you've never used Photoshop before, you may need to read these sections a few times to refresh yourself. If you are already familiar with Photoshop, you can skip these sections and head directly to an exercise.

Installing software on your computer can be a big hassle and take time. Especially so if you are installing new software on a computer used by more than one person. This can be daunting for even the best of us. It is time consuming and takes a while to get your computer back up and running for one thing. If you are installing software on a computer that someone else uses, you might find yourself spending half the day walking around the house moving from computer to computer. You could just "sudo apt-get install", but why do that when you can install it in about 10 seconds? What follows are instructions for installing software using a virtual machine or bootable USB drive. This method is known as a virtual machine. This way is similar to installing software on a virtual machine. You download the virtual machine software onto your computer. You then load the virtual machine software on your computer. When the software is installed, you can run the virtual machine software. When you turn on your computer, you can start the virtual machine software. If everything is properly configured, you can use the virtual machine software as though you were working in the real world. Installing Software Using a Virtual Machine I recommend using VirtualBox. This is free, open-source software that lets you create a virtual machine on your computer. Download and install VirtualBox. Creating a Virtual Machine Once the VirtualBox software is installed, you will be presented with the VirtualBox interface. Click on the New button. Select the operating system that you want to create. Click on the Begin button. VirtualBox will create a virtual hard drive on your hard drive. You need to accept the license agreement when prompted. You can do this by clicking Yes, and you will be given more information on what you are going to be doing. Click on Finish. Using the Virtual Machine When you turn on your computer, you should be able to select the operating system on which you want to load software. You should be presented with a window that looks like this If you see a window that looks like this, then you have not installed your virtual machine correctly. The steps below will help you to install the virtual machine properly. Click on the Start menu. Click on Devices. Click on USB/CD. Click on Create a USB/CD Image. 05a79cecff

Q: CentOS 7 hostname resolved as localhost I got the hostname problem on CentOS 7. CentOS was installed on Virtualbox with bridge networking, and a VM Windows 8.1 was installed. The hostname was set to centos.local. Problem is that I can't see centos in any ip at all. I can see only localhost. I tried: Setting the hostname to centos in /etc/hosts Unchecking DNS resolution in NetworkManager Using ip command to find the ip How can I make this work? Thanks! A: The ip command when connected to the host by itself allows you to access the host by hostname. To resolve all of the hostname, run the command: ip addr and you should see your gateway and that is your dns server. Then ipconfig will list all subnets including the local one where you are. In baseball, a Red Sox fan will say: "Alcárcer, sacar para ellos." A Cub fan will say: "Alomar, sacar para ellos." In football, a Falcons fan will say: "Little, push in for them!" In hockey, a Hurricanes fan will say: "Kessel, top of circle for them!" In hockey, a Hurricanes fan will say: "Kessel, top of circle for them!" All are variations on the same theme: to give the puck away to another team. It's a great game, it's fun, but the only way to win is to help your team score goals by making your team's hardest, or most challenging, players better. Look at it this way: think about the New York Knicks. How well do they play when Carmelo Anthony is out? They're almost impossible to beat. Think about how much better the Magic would be with Dwight Howard. Think about how much stronger a team is when Lou Williams is playing good basketball. But when those guys are out, it's as if the entire franchise runs on cruise control. They're not scary good; they're good enough. They are what they are. - - - - - C.J. Mosley wants to be the best. In every way. If you've ever watched an NFL team, you know it's true. Mosley isn't always one of the most vocal guys on the field (he's more of a leader behind the scenes), but his play speaks for itself. He's a great blitzzer, a great run-stopper, a great player for the Ravens. Saturday night against the Jacksonville Jaguars, Mosley was doing a little bit of everything. He'd pressure the quarterback. He'd rush the passer. He'd drop into coverage. He'd play defensive end. He was giving the Jaguars everything they could handle, without giving up much on the scoreboard. He might have even played as well as any player in the league on that night. Unfortunately, when it came time for his teammates to score touchdowns, they couldn't do it. They missed all five opportunities, and that was largely because the offense for the Jaguars—a very good offense—used Mosley and his teammates against them. At least the way Mosley plays, he gives you a little something for every offensive snap. In a game where
