Business 4.0.1.20-Patch 13+ Patch. risk! business 4.0.1.20(Photos: Bose) Bose is famous for making audio gear, and it's got a new pair of headphones you should know about. The QuietComfort 35 II headphones ($299.99) look and feel quite a bit like the well-regarded QuietComfort 35 headphones that Bose introduced back in 2014. The biggest difference is that the new model is still noise canceling, but also comes with a new companion app that helps you work in noisy environments. The noise canceling technology is now built into an eight-shaped device that sits inside the earcup. Pressing the right spot on the headset activates the noise canceling, and letting go deactivates it. There's also a physical slider built into the headset that lets you adjust the volume even when the noise canceling is on. The on/off noise canceling does work well, but it can be annoying when it's on. I found myself tapping the spot on the right earcup to turn it off. The big highlight of the new headphones is Bose's new Noise Genie Companion app. According to Bose, it can take on about 90 percent of the noise that many offices are filled with. To use Noise Genie, download it to your iPhone or Android device. (It's available in both iPhone and Android versions
