The WBTV-TV Charlotte station reports that the Greensboro police have identified the juvenile as Augusta Shipp but have not yet released her name. According to a police report, a couple was awakened by a burglar in their North Carolina home. The man confronted the intruder and was shot with a handgun. The Brunswick County Sheriff's Department told WBTV-TV that officers were at a home on May 16. Police told the news station that while they were investigating the shooting, they found evidence -- including a woman's purse -- that suggested the suspect lived there. This lecture reviewed the state of the art in the teaching of acting, the current research program in the teaching of acting, what the future of the field must involve, and what resources are currently available to the acting teacher.

I've noticed the new PostCSS version (2.0) has been released with support for SourceMaps and Hot Module Replacement - two very useful features when working with JavaScript. In this post, I'll look at how to use these features to integrate PostCSS into existing JavaScript based projects. The example I'm using is an Electron project. You'll note I am targeting PostCSS 2.0 for this example. In version 2.0, PostCSS supports importing of files and the ability to write custom functions with the `function()` API. I will use these new features, so make sure you are using 2.0 to follow along.

Install PostCSS In order to use PostCSS in Electron you'll need to install the Node.js package `postcss`.
`npm install --save-dev postcss` Now that you have PostCSS installed, you'll need to configure it as your loader in your `webpack.config.js` file.

module.exports = { module : { loaders : [ { test : /\.css$/, loaders : ['style-loader', 'css-loader', 'postcss-loader' ] } ] } };

Configure Webpack to Use PostCSS Before you can use PostCSS, you'll first need to modify your `webpack.config.js` file to add a loader to process your PostCSS configuration.

module.exports = { module : { loaders : [ { test : /\.css$/, loaders : ['style-loader', 'css-loader', 'postcss-
