With the new compiler feature, Named type instances may be resolved independently of the assembly in which they were declared: // Foo.dll internal interface IBar { } // Bar.dll internal class Bar : IBar { } // FooBar.exe class Program { static void Main(string[] args) { var instance = new Bar(); } } The IBar interface is public, so a type in another assembly can declare this interface without needing to specify an assembly name: // Fuz.dll internal interface IBar { } // FooBar.exe class Program { static void Main(string[] args) { var instance = new Fuz.IBar(); } } The compiler will resolve the IBar interface in Fuz.dll without complaint. However, if I wanted to declare an instance of this same interface in Bar.dll, I could not do this: // Bar.dll internal class Bar : IBar { } // Fuz.dll class Program { static void Main(string[] args) { var instance = new Bar();
