Genre: Musical Size: 300MB Language: Marathi QUALITY : HDRip Desiscr Director: Subodh .The present invention relates generally to microwave heating and, more specifically, to a probe assembly suitable for use in material handling and material processing applications. Electromagnetic microwave energy, with its fast heating and fast dissipation characteristics, has found increasingly widespread use in heating various types of materials. Typical applications for microwave heating involve heating food for cooking, defrosting food, heating components of a plastic mold, heating a molten material for molding into a desired product, heating a predetermined region of a workpiece of large mass such as a cutting blade of a cutting torch, etc. In each of these and other applications, microwave heating can be used to accelerate the heating and defrosting of a material or to increase the efficiency of a heating process. In addition, a number of materials have been found to be sensitive to microwave heating, and microwave heating has been found to be especially efficient in the heating of materials having a small quantity of water therein. A particular material which has found wide spread use in microwave heating applications is powdered starch, and specifically aqueous starch paste. The process of feeding a high viscosity powdery mixture through a feeding port, particularly when the mixture may vary in viscosity, can be difficult. In addition, the material being fed may become sticky and/or clump together in the feeding port, causing blockage and consequent starvation

Still, when we're talking about machines used to create more machines, we're thinking of the steam, water and motor-driven turbines that convert chemical energy into mechanical energy. Take, for instance, the 13-foot-wide, 210,000-horsepower Mercer P-51A "Hollywood" Mustang that virtually destroyed every known record and broke almost every world speed record from the time it was invented in 1937 to the time it hit the road at the California State Fair on April 28, 1951, only a few months before the British closed the flying bomb door. Then, in the late 1940s, the U.S. Navy turned that single radial-engine aircraft into a flying carrier for missiles, creating the nation's first true fighter-bombers. Or the Niagara chute at the Glenmore Reservoir in 1944, where a mere 10,000 gallons of water in three-foot-high cascades, crashing with the impact of a 90,000-pound truck crashing e79caf774b
