GGG - In the Porn. ., first pass, while this is all happening, the score settles to eight a bit more, as three more singles get played out in the final inning. Run Game The run game has been something of a puzzle so far. The Brewers have led the NL in many of the categories for 2013, and haven't led the league in Runs scored. This is where that gets a little complicated, but I'm going to attempt to explain it in a line of thought. I've never seen the Brewers lead their league in batting average until they had 31 runners on base at the end of September. But, to be fair, I've also never seen a team have an average at .345 in a month of September before, or a year of August before. Here's an example: In 2010, the Marlins led the NL in batting average, but they led the league in Runs Scored. And, the Brewers were leading the NL in Runs Scored in 2012, despite trailing the Cardinals in Batting Average. Here's what I think is going on. The Brewers have had an All Star lineup. Wade Miley, Yovani Gallardo, Corey Knebel, Ryan Braun, Travis Shaw, Carlos Gomez, Jean Segura, Chris Carter, and Jonathan Lucroy all received votes. Even with Braun out the lineup has an interesting look to it. I also think that Brewers pitchers have done an excellent job of keeping a lead. This is where the Brewers have a fair amount of success, and this is a big reason they are 13-3 in games with a lead. The Brewers are tied for the NL lead in games with a runner on first, third or home with a runner on second, eighth or ninth with runners on base. For example, the Brewers are 10-4 with runners on first or third with a runner on second. They have been even better when they have runners on first with a runner on third, as they have a 6-0 record in those situations. The Brewers have a 4-4 record with runners on second with a runner on third, but
