cable splitting design I have a simple ICSP cable on a narrow SMD package. Two pins (X and Y) on the left side, and one on the right side. I am trying to move the two pins (the Y and X) to the same left side. In theory, it is simple and would involve a single cable (the cables are supposed to be kinda parallel). I am not sure on the right way of doing this, which would involve using a PC board. I thought of having a thick ICSP package like this: If I remove the left side (because I need to split it), I would have this: So I am not sure if this would work, because I don't have any connectors, just the package itself. What would be the best way to do this? Would I have to sell the left side? But would this work? Another way I have in mind would be having a PCB without the left side, and cut the wires on it, and solder the wires together. A: What would be the best way to do this? Would I have to sell the left side? But would this work? You can, but it would be hard and may be costly. I would sell it with the right side attached. In order to have a good device for both left and right connections
