1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a joint structure for wiring to be installed in a building or the like, and relates to a connector structure in which terminal fittings provided with wires are stored in a housing, and are connected to each other by connecting the wires to each other. The present invention also relates to a connector for a wire harness on which a connector provided with terminal fittings is fitted and connected to the terminal fittings in a housing provided with the terminal fittings. 2. Description of the Related Art In general, a wiring harness for a building or the like is prepared by bundling a number of electric wires, and a connector that is provided with terminal fittings at both ends of the electric wires is fitted to the wiring harness at a predetermined fitting position. One end of the terminal fitting is inserted into the connector, and the terminal fitting is connected to the wire. The other end of the terminal fitting is connected to a mating terminal fitting that is fitted to a mating connector. The wiring harness is generally stored in a state in which the terminal fittings are stored in a housing, or in a state in which the terminal fittings are connected to each other via a connection piece. In the latter case, wire-cutting work is performed to separate the connected terminal fittings from each other, and the terminal fittings are assembled. The terminal fitting is conventionally provided with a lock arm that is inserted into a locking groove formed in the housing, and is locked to the housing. A lock side lock portion for engaging with the locking groove is formed at the tip end of the lock arm. When the terminal fitting is inserted into the housing, the lock arm is inserted into the locking groove while being pushed, and is then gradually moved inward. The lock side lock portion is engaged with the locking groove, and is thereby prevented from moving out to the outside of the housing. Therefore, the terminal fitting is prevented from being removed from the housing. A terminal fitting in which the lock arm is integrally formed with a tubular shape may be used. In this case, the lock side lock portion may be formed as a lock arm side lock portion that protrudes to the outside of the terminal fitting in a tubular manner. When the terminal fitting is inserted into the housing, the lock arm is moved to the housing side. The lock arm side lock portion engages with the locking groove that is formed in
