For more information and process of development, please visit : Find the application itself. Using ActivityInfo.processName I have build an app that has to find a process itself, but I would like to find a specific process (Not all the applications on a device), but the problem is that when I do GetRunningTasks() or GetRunningTasksWithUserAffinity(), they return all the running applications. I need something like ActivityInfo.processName to be able to distinguish between some apps like the calculator, WhatsApp and a music player. But I'm not able to do it. I've seen this question: Get the process name of the app itself but it doesn't seem to work. private Process mP; protected

What's new in Mac Biskwi Adventures:

/Game I've been to E3 and I've played the trailer for Squarebound. All very nice looking (if you didn't discount it because it lacked voice acting, Japanese or Western. Doesn't stop it being very lovely looking), although I did get a nagging suspicion that, deep in my mind, I'm not going to like it. As I say, I think the decision not to have it in the West has more to do with emotional responses than a (purely materialistic) decision to not make money. Anyway, seeing it might be one of the best things. Interestingly, I note there's no mention of Square in any of the trailers (which tend to be full of marketing schmaltz and maybe a token hacker or two) - maybe Square's too ashamed of its past? I've played the trailer, and it seemed to have some lovely looking ideas and a depth of design I don't see in many of the games I shoot for the zombie knifing-fun of Games Without Frontiers, where I'm always scanning something I can't quite place for being a new, interesting game idea before I can get my head around it. I didn't find it wanting as a zombie game because I had a fabulously exaggerated idea about how wonderful it was going to be. Specifically, you're walking along and you see these strange, dead, unsuspecting things in the forest, and you touch them and then set fire to them. For a zombie game, these things are very definitely not zombies. They're people who have been knocked down, forgotten, played with, asked for a show, something, and then set on fire in the forest as their scent gets lost in a wind and rain. Then you shoot them in the head. It's the quick-'n'-dirty zombie shoot-'em-up we need now, and I hope it does more that it does of this. Today's front-page headline from the Times is that Real own Milan, and that's just the rub because I really bloody and sincerely love seeing Real and their colours. (And his) Ronaldo and Modrić and yes, Modrić's wife - why isn't he married to a Matrix actor? Saints Row, the thing where Ratchet used to have sex with bad people, is really going to happen. Actually just last night. Around 8:00. In London. Re-Wired. Coz it's hard to find Wi-
