Edge of Space is a science fiction serial novel by Harry Harrison, later published in four volumes in the mid-1970s by Bantam Books. Originally published by Ballantine Books for mass market paperback in 1975, the book was the second of two Harrison's novels published in paperback by Bantam. It was the first of five science fiction novels in which Harrison wrote as the pen name "John Campbell." This unusual book was written at a time when hero-of-science-fiction readership was becoming more widespread, and Harrison was a popular writer through his numerous works of space opera (more specifically, the Star Wars saga). In his 1984 book What Made Science Fiction Great? Edgar Rice Burroughs and "The Martian," Harrison commented on the unusually high sales of Edge of Space and his intention of writing books similar in style: Synopsis In 2055, new discoveries relating to Earth's origins cause science to cast Earth's history into the past. Han Solo is arrested for consorting with criminals but is freed on bail with a large cash advance. A mysterious apartment is rented for Solo and Giz Wills. Han Solo is contacted by the bounty hunter Pellaeon, who has information about a recently-discovered escape pod launched from the salvaged World of Tordor in the year 2052. Hired to recover this capsule, Solo and Wills discover that the futuristic world of Tordor was under the rule of the Hacree dynasty, and he works to discover what secrets are contained in the pod. Ultimately, Solo and Wills find that the pod contained a child and her adopted father, who later commits suicide before climbing into the pod's capsule. The pod itself is retrieved, but no one knows how it traveled to Tordor. Meanwhile, the Hacree Emperor is killed in a palace coup, and the young Emperor Tudenham succeeds. He is deeply devoted to the founding laws of Hacree, and he establishes a closer governmental relations with the Core Worlds. With the development of an aquatic civilization and their customs raised a notch higher than the Hacree, the Core Worlds are called the Core, while the Hacree are called the Mercenaries. Wills finds himself embroiled in a duel with the Hacree bounty hunter Tarolt Refa, who had been hired to locate Solo. Refa is unable to locate Solo, but Solo is invited as a kind of guest of honor to an Hacree celebration. Han learns of the fighter
