One-month outcome of surgical treatment for chronic aortic insufficiency. Endoscopic approach to the aortic valve with percutaneous prosthetic valve implantation has become an attractive alternative to surgical treatment of severe aortic regurgitation. It is also a valid approach for patients with a high surgical risk. Since the role of surgery in endoscopic aortic valve repair is still uncertain, the early results of this procedure, according to the systematic endoscopic approach and compared to those of a traditional surgical approach are discussed. Between 1997 and 2002, 37 patients with severe aortic regurgitation underwent aortic endoscopic valve repair. After a mean follow-up of 12.2+/-4.6 months, 29 patients (78%) showed no symptoms, seven patients (19%) required a surgical reintervention because of a worsening of the function or a bleeding from the access site, and one patient was lost to follow-up. All patients in class III or IV of the New York Heart Association classification were alive at discharge and were in class I or II at follow-up. The endoscopic repair of the aortic valve with the systematic approach was not only effective but also safe at this early follow-up.Effect of propranolol or temazepam on morphine self-administration. In this study the role of beta-adrenergic neurotransmission in morphine reward was examined in four experiments. Three of the experiments used a dose response procedure to determine whether administration of the beta-adrenergic antagonist, propranolol (0.5-10.0 mg/kg ip), or the benzodiazepine antagonist, temazepam (0.5-5.0 mg/kg ip), modifies the pattern of responding for morphine. In one experiment the frequency of responding was assessed in saline-treated rats as a measure of 'baseline' voluntary consumption. In the second experiment, responding for morphine was compared with that for food to determine whether the effect of the drugs was specific for opioid reinforcement. In the other two experiments the effects of the same doses of propranolol and temazepam on responding maintained by self-administered food pellets were also studied. Neither propranolol nor temazepam was effective in preventing or counteracting the development of tolerance or physical dependence. In addition, propranolol failed to modify the number of food pellets self-administered, and temazepam failed to attenuate the

A Labour councillor who was suspended after publishing a video showing a fight outside a nightclub on Downing Street was reinstated by the party's ruling body. Lord Adonis made a fortune from private equity between 1999 and 2014, earning him the nickname "Lord Cashmonkey" from the Financial Times. A report into the Labour group on Culture, Media and Sport, published after claims on the blog Iain Dale's Politics Home, has recommended that the leader's spokesman Nigel Evans and Lord Adonis be stripped of the group's whip. Mr Evans was suspended over a tweet in which he shared a clip from a video posted on Twitter of a fight outside the Park Lane club the Rum Diaries. It was tweeted by Jim Anderton, who is also a member of Labour's ruling body. Lord Adonis has now been re-instated as a member of the ruling body. The BBC reported that Labour has not given a reason for the reinstatement. Read More A spokesman for the party said: "In keeping with longstanding practice, the party's national executive decided to reinstate Lord Adonis as a full member of the ruling body."Jan Długosz Jan Długosz (;, ), was a Polish writer, historian, diarist and diplomat. He was born in Bierutów in the province of Łęczyca, and died in Wislica (currently Wyszków), on the border with Silesia, in 1478. His chronicle of the history of Poland in the 14th and early 15th centuries is regarded as the first historical document written in a modern Polish language. Biography Jan Długosz was born in Bierutów, just below the Vistula river, a short distance to the west of Łęczyca, into a family of impoverished nobility, originally from Kraków. He had six younger siblings. His mother died when he was seven, his father died before his tenth birthday. Thereafter, his step-mother, his younger brothers and sisters raised him. They did so poorly that by the age of 15, Długosz was forced to leave the household and earn his living. Jan took to writing, first handball, then travels and eventually became a priest in Kraków
