In a study conducted by the University of Michigan School of Public Health, researchers found that women who have previously used alcohol and drugs in pregnancy, have earlier-than-planned pregnancies, and whose parents did not use contraception, are at increased risk for pregnancy complications. Michelle de la Bruyere, MD, MS, and colleagues studied women enrolled in the Michigan INFORM (Integrated Network for a Survey of Readiness, Maternal, Infant and Newborn Health) study. This natural experiment of rapid delivery prevention in pregnancy was designed to evaluate maternal and newborn outcomes following an integrated, community-based approach to prevent preterm birth. The researchers identified 378 women with no previous births, and 3,679 women with an earlier-than-planned pregnancy (EPP) (earlier than 20 weeks' gestation). The researchers found that those with an EPP were less likely to use a method of birth control at their last sex, and more likely to use in-progress methods, such as condoms and withdrawal. Furthermore, they were more likely to use more than one method of birth control at last sex. The researchers also found that compared with women with an EPP who did not use alcohol, women with a history of substance use, and whose parents did not use birth control, were more likely to experience a pregnancy complication. The rate of pregnancy complications was highest in women with an EPP who used alcohol and whose parents did not use birth control. A history of alcohol or drug use in pregnancy were the strongest predictors of pregnancy complications among women with an earlier-than-planned pregnancy (24.6 vs. 20.9% for those with no EPP). They also found that women with a history of substance use were

It was completed in the past couple months for a book publisher that was looking to put out a tabletop RPG called "Monster Legacy". Little did I know that it would go on to be the greatest undertaking of my design career. Working on Monster Legacy was a horrible life lesson in game design. One of the biggest mistakes I made was not being smarter. As an indie author, I failed in many of the usual areas a typical person is versed in. I failed in management, time and budget management, proper marketing, and most importantly, i failed to understand that the book was what it was not even there yet, this pack needed to be the primary priority. Even though I am not an artist, I can say that

The Abom people are an indigenous people in the Far East of Gabon and the Republic of the Congo. The Abom form a part of the Bantu Monomatapa ethnic group, of whom the major subgroup are the Mbooi and Nzema. The Abom language has been classified as one of the divisions of the Southern Bantoid languages. Most of the Abom live near the border between the Republic of the Congo and Gabon, while the Abom living in the northern part of Gabon are culturally and ethnically different from the Abom in the Republic of the Congo. The population of the Abom numbers 185,000. History The history of the Abom dates back to the arrival of ancestral Bantu populations of Central West Africa, in particular the Soos. The Soos were one of the first waves of Bantu peoples to reach the current region of present-day Cameroon. Their settlement in the territory of the present-day Republic of the Congo dates back to the 17th and 18th centuries. A large-scale migration of approximately 60,000 Soos from the current territory of Chad to Cameroon is believed to have occurred during and just after World War I. Soos traders were also responsible for the use and administration of salt as a source of money in the area. The Soos were displaced by a larger-scale migration and settlement of another Bantu group, the Bakuba, during the eighteenth century. After the Bakuba dispossessed the Soos of their salt monopoly, the Bakuba quickly displaced the Soos from the current territory of Gabon as well. By the late 18th century the Bakuba had established themselves as the dominant population of the region, but Bamboutos dominated the population of Upper Ogooué as well. Bakuba-Mbooi settlements were the first to be created in the Gamboma region, and the Bakuba-Mbooi population would grow rapidly throughout the 19th century. By the early 20th century the Bamboutos had been drawn to the eastern portion of the watershed of the Ogooué River. Bamboutos settlements were later established in the more productive Ogooué delta region, where they would remain throughout much of the 20th century. Bamboutos were unable to effectively control the Bakuba-Mbooi; conflicts between the two groups were common. Throughout the 19th and early 20th centuries the
