Prevalence of Mitochondrial Dysfunction in Patients with Chronic Obstructive Pulmonary Disease. Mitochondrial dysfunction is emerging as an important pathogenic factor in chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). To determine the possible prevalence of mitochondrial dysfunction in patients with COPD, mitochondria were isolated from lung tissue and respiratory enzymes were measured. Pulmonary function was assessed, and the results compared with the patients' responses to bronchodilator therapy. Mitochondria were isolated from explants of lung and respiratory chain enzymes measured. Mitochondria were also isolated from lung tissue of patients with COPD and respiratory chain enzymes assayed. This study was carried out in the Respiratory and Sleep Research Laboratory of the University of Michigan Health System (Ann Arbor, MI). Mitochondria were isolated from 11 patients with COPD and 8 healthy subjects. Mitochondrial respiratory enzyme activities were measured. Mitochondria isolated from lung tissue of COPD patients were also examined for respiratory enzyme activities.

Mitochondria from the COPD patients had significantly (P

It's no secret to anyone but those who have never tasted them how wonderful the flavors of hot peppers are. The kind of excitement in a person's eyes when they bite into a fresh jalapeno is enough to make me want to say, "Say it ain't so!"... and when I say, "say it ain't so," I'm saying it ain't so, but it is! Like many other spices, the flavors of hot peppers were developed by those who took the time and trouble to find the very highest quality ingredients. No less than Spain has the best peppers. And, they are absolutely wonderful! It's as if you've added a spice to your food that was created just for you! My son won't have any other seasoning on his beefsteaks after tasting these little beauties! 3 people found this helpful Cajun One Cateret, AR 12/31/2009 Great for seasoning kabobs or other meats, but I would definitely not give this to
