The morphology of the olfactory bulbs was studied with light- and electron-microscopic techniques in guinea pigs, a species displaying species-specificity in odor discrimination. In the non-osmotic olfactory bulb of this animal, which lacks large cilia on the olfactory receptor cells, the follicles associated with the glomeruli contained homogeneous tufts of small or moderate-sized sensory axons bearing a few olfactory receptor and supporting cells. The main olfactory fibers entered the bulb through the perivascular channels and projected through the superficial part of the cortex to the external plexiform layer where they synapsed with the dendrites of the superficial olfactory neurons. In the olfactory bulb of this animal a number of axons were observed to form synapses on the pial membranes facing the neuropile. Some of the fine processes of the perivascular glia were found to extend into the bulb through narrow cytoplasmic channels. The type of glial cell in the bulb was studied in all the levels of the bulb, using the monoclonal antibodies against the murine glial fibrillary acidic protein (GFAP) in free-floating sections from histological material. A population of astrocytes with typical features of Bergmann glia of the avian brain was observed in the external plexiform layer and the glomerular layer. In the granular layer, two distinct populations of astrocytes were located. One population was formed by satellite cells and corresponded to the Bergmann glia of the telencephalic neuropile. The second population was located near the perivascular channels and showed the characteristic features of ciliary astrocytes, i.e., fibrous astrocytes, which often formed a cluster around the blood vessels of capillaries. The latter cells were preferentially distributed in the most superficial and apical parenchymal portion of the bulb, where it appears that the physiological activity is maximum.Sen. It was also really good at being 9-4-1, so it was already going in the right direction! Tomorrow will be a big day for the five of us! However, a lot of great things are on the horizon too. We were SUPER excited about last night's game and were very happy with how our guys played, BUT we also had a VERY important, yet, almost forgotten segment of our program. The whole team has had a very important piece missing from our team, our Mentors. Usually, our students get free tickets to all home games and games outside of the arena, and for all four game, we had someone there to keep them company. We have no one here to do this job. However, there are a lot of opportunities to help out! The student section has gotten much better over the last few games, and we would LOVE to have someone there to tell students to sit up, sit down, stand up, or sit back, depending on the situation. EVERYONE in our program is just fantastic. Everyone is friendly, hard-working and helpful. These things we provide to our student-athletes are free. For example, if you are going to our game with our student-athletes, you are going in costume of some sort. We always have plenty of free T's. If we win the state championship, we have about $1,000 in donations. Anything for our kids!!! We can be awesome and win. So, if you are willing to help out at the game on the side, that would be GREAT! We could use some help at the game, so PLEASE e-mail if you would like to help out! One last thing, we are planning a trip to Green Bay! It's a five day trip that will have a GREAT time. The game is also a BIG event 6d1f23a050
