(there's no older than than 2008) and supports compression and decompression so this is a step in the right direction. How could I do that? A: tensorflow is a library to do Machine Learning. It is not really a tool for audio classification. However, using tensorflow you should do the following: a. Create a model that takes the WAV as an input and returns a classifier as an output b. Instantly save the model c. Use tensorflow, either by reading/writing data to a file or by using google cloud function. This will help you in getting the classification done in near real-time. You can use the model to do audio classification from the microphone using android I would also suggest you to download the recording and do the classification without uploading the WAV on tensorflow. This will help you to get the accuracy, and if you do it in the cloud you can reuse the model without having to do the whole thing again. Q: O que o ASYNC é? Já conheço bastante do assincronismo/async do javascript, mais gostaria de entender melhor o que ele faz: Exemplo: Primeiro: var api = ''; // recibe e retorna pela chamada async var i = async (function() { return await fetch(api); })(); console.log(i); Segundo: var api = ''; // recibe e retorna pela chamada async var i = fetch(api); console.log(i); Já li alguns exemplos, mas não entendi o que eles estão fazendo de certo (tem algum padrão?). A: Isto não é assincronismo, é definição de assincronismo/async. Diferente da linguag
