Field of the Invention The present invention relates to surgical instruments and, in various embodiments, to surgical cutting and stapling instruments and staple cartridges for cutting and stapling tissue. 2. Description of Related Art Recently, a new device comprising an ultrasonic surgical instrument and a staple cartridge has been developed. The staple cartridge comprises two parts: a reusable cartridge that attaches to the ultrasonic surgical instrument and a single-use disposable cartridge that houses a plurality of staples. The device is assembled prior to use and is disposed of after use. Tissue may be fragmented or sealed by deploying one or more rows of staples from the disposable or reusable staple cartridge. U.S. Pat. No. 4,100,420 to Green discloses a surgical stapler comprising a disposable loading unit and an elongate disposable or reusable anvil that are connected by an annular connecting member. The anvil includes a slot through which a knife blade is advanced to cut and staplify tissue. The anvil is attached to the connecting member by a snap fit or by using a force fit. U.S. Pat. No. 5,524,638 to Robertson et al. also discloses a surgical stapling instrument. The instrument comprises a disposable or reusable loading unit and an elongate or circular anvil that are attached by a connecting member. The anvil includes a slot through which a knife blade is advanced to cut and staplify tissue. The anvil is attached to the connecting member by a snap fit or locking pin. Current surgical staplers/cutters require that the clinician apply a certain amount of force to close the jaw and staple the tissue together. The devices are further unable to “remember” what portion of tissue was clamped last, potentially causing tissue to be over clamped or under clamped. This is a result of the clinician being required to close the entire handle of the instrument, thereby fully clamping the tissue being treated. Moreover, the current devices are not configured for multiple firing, i.e. the ability to fire the instrument a predetermined number
