Loaded photo gravures of the prehistoric world. Photogravure is the most powerful and comprehensive image editing tool that is needed to manage and edit images. It is used to digitally print out photographs from printed or online. Photogravure is a B2P phototype which was developed by craftsman Roger Picquart who uses image processing technology to make photoengrave (plaster printing) photographs and prints them at the offset press. After extensive research and developing this Photoengrave technology and software for a decade, he received a patent for it in November 1998. Photogravure is recognized as a new and creative platform for photoengrave in the world. It can be used to create new and different artworks with plaster engravings. The image data (screen shot format) is input into a commercial software which is used to render and process the image to a higher quality image file format, such as Adobe DNG, DNG Extended, RAW, TIFF, JPEG, JPG, Portable Network Graphics (PNG), etc. The input image is then used to create a high quality image file which has a high resolution for the desired material such as wood, paper, stone, metal, glass, plastic, and even ceramic, and even base materials. The image file can then be sent to a commercial printing company which prints the images on the desired medium and can print in large quantities at a higher resolution with a higher quality and is then ready for sales, distribution and publication. Photogravure is now growing rapidly. It is used in various areas such as: Social Security Service, National Social Security Service, Instituto Nacional de Quimica of Mexico, Art Conservation, Product and company brands, Great Britain's Royal Institution, etc. It is also used to popularize products and brands. You can also use the images for your personal use to add designs to gift boxes, wooden pails, frame pieces, and other things. You can also send the images to be printed on a large scale, and can be showcased in museums and cultural art exhibitions. You can also add vintage and retro designs to your own home. It's even possible to use the images to enhance your pet's photos, product brands, and logos. Photogravure is used in many countries such as Canada, France, Thailand, Turkey, Thailand, Indonesia, Malaysia, China, Japan, UK, Germany, Australia, Spain, Mexico, Brasil, Ireland, Uruguay, etc. Now, digital photography has transformed the way people take pictures.
