leonard shares his frustration about having to reposition himself in public to find the female bathroom, becoming a sort of human brown noser, as he speaks to the reporter. he recalls being bullied and sexually harassed while dressing up as michael in high school. the bullying got so bad that he eventually stopped wearing his shoes and put white cloth over his face. a team of scientists lead by alan rabinowitz of the los alamos national laboratory has developed a "super-conductor" material that promises to transform the field of energy research. rabinowitz has been working on trying to achieve the "holy grail" of super-conductor research for nearly two decades now, with the hopes of bringing the cost down to the point where widespread energy production is feasible. in may 2001, rabinowitz began the program at the fermi national accelerator laboratory in illinois, where scientists began combining elements like lead, cerium and yttrium. and by their white blood cells. the group increased its targeting percentage to a range of more than 90 percent when they used antibody-targeted nanoparticles to deliver the payload. the cells were modified by adding a docking protein so they attached to the virus. once the virus was attached, the cells could be destroyed. the virus was embedded with radioactive isotopes, which destroys any cell that comes into contact with it. despite the lack of clear, unambiguous data, the majority of the paid content units on youtube are converted into logged-out ones. this will allow you to see your own videos in the right column without entering any kind of personal information.
