Seeing that my father in law had the same problem on his iPhone when he was trying to open the safe, I did some research online and found that safes are typically one or more locks a dial, on the surface of the safe, placed within the safe, and typically with numbers around the dial. Every lock or combination is a unique number on the dials face, and if you do not know the combination you will be unable to open the safe. Before using the combination of dials, your safest bet would be to press every lock (or combination of locks) on the safe to figure out which one is right. After a couple of minutes or so you'll know which one opens the safe. If one doesn't, I recommend asking someone nearby to help!

Clip or tear off the tab on the outside of the safe and place it on the center of your shopping list. Along with the pliers and bolt cutter, you also need a hacksaw, gun powder, a torch, and a hammer or other good blunt object for scraping the combination numbers off the safe. If you know someone who will help you move the safe, you can also designate them as a contact. Use a hacksaw to saw off both parts of the safe. Keep an eye on the hacksaw so it doesn't get dull, and clean the blades frequently with gunpowder. Once you have both pieces of the safe on the ground, use the hammer to gouge out the combination numbers. Be careful not to gouge out the combination too deeply, and take your time to scrape the numbers off the safe. This might sound strange, but it will seriously damage your safe. For a small safe, you can only cover the safe with your body to protect it from the intense heat. But if it's bigger than four inches thick and it's made of cast iron, you'll have to take more extreme precautions.
