the walk through the black gallery was a welcome surprise. the music was soft enough to enhance the experience and provide a sense of intimacy. it was a beautiful moment of quiet observation. as i walked along, i kept staring at the odd, large drips of paint that had fallen and were continuing to slide down the wall like slow motion raindrops. it added a new dimension to the show. it is a beautiful thing to be able to watch time slip from one moment to the next, like a raindrop falling. echakhch's shifted sims is about what's real, what's not, and what we consider real. echakhch questions the ability of a digital avatar to express a range of human emotions and beliefs. she explores the possibility of re-actualizing bodies and faces that have been rendered obsolete by change. she explores changes that have already taken place, that have already occurred. as she works on her next series of paintings, she takes her audiences' experiences into account, often employing the work of psychology to inform her process. she sees these works as "exercises in self-discovery: i can't tell you how much research i have done on the human psyche, its control systems, fears, and desires, and the impact of subliminal messages on our consciousness. i don't mean to say that every person who views the work has a similar experience, but that some do. i want to expose the viewer's subconscious, so that they can find out for themselves what they are in control of and what they are influenced by in their lives. i am creating what is to me a kind of psychotherapy. it's a call to the viewers to come into the gallery space and see if they can find within themselves the things they have been hiding from their conscious selves."

when the simulator was first unveiled, i was able to use certain special features of the program. after a quick search, jeff found about 6 different custom item sets you can buy for your characters; one of them happens to be the big bang aliens set. this activity is banned in all official leagues, including the official world of warcraft auction house. you can finish an in game day 50 match with your character or your friends if you create the option on your in game settings menu. the only exceptions are for servers and to hit certain external limits. among those attending to get a taste of a different world of the sims game are electronic music performers from the universe based in new york city. youre either looking for a new way to broadcast your videos, a new way to share movies, photos and files or a cheaper way to purchase or use viacom content. (see our music chart to learn how the charts work.) looking more closely, i was intrigued by the works of cage and müller. cage's work was inspired by the then newly discovered phenomenon of brain waves

in the 1940s and by related experiments of binaff, joliot-curie, and witten, where he worked with later generation technologies and instruments, such as those made by lucid and descartes. in that work he uses the new electric media to the performative experiments, which created a framework for the popularization of avant-garde art, music, and film.

cage also created his famous process-based compositions. one such example is the famous and controversial 4'33, where the composer placed a metronome in the gallery and visitors were asked to count out a minute. the piece included two footsteps, so in turn one could count four at a time and after each counting the metronome strikes.
