i have been a voracious reader since i was a child. i have read stephen king at the ripe age of eleven, and have since continued to read the works of stephen king to this day. i think of my ability to continue reading the works of stephen king as an indicator of my sheer literary talent. as much as i loved our visit to tattoo alley, i wasn't thinking about my lovely tattoo as much as i was about the couple walking next to me - because they were both hot as fuck. they were chatting it up and making eyes at each other, and i was enjoying the view so much that i said nothing. one would think a girl like me would have done at least something, but no, i only smiled and waved. and waited. the only premise of a dating service is that you're looking for love. it has nothing to do with towing the line of propriety, or taking you off on dates just because we have a mutual friend. (that being said, if you ask me to take you to lunch tomorrow, i shall respond favorably.) but to say i think the idea of a dating service is as common as that sounds just..odd. bella donna is more than just a place to stay, its a place you'll want to stay again and again. this european hotel is named after its owner and her sister, both of whom were key in bringing the design to life. women like to dress up and be sexy, and are not afraid to show just a touch of cleavage when they enjoy a night out on the town. if you want a place to stay that is romantic, exciting, and a tad sexy, get the donna bell free sex movies. this weekend i decided to give hotel bella donna a whirl, and was surprised to find myself transported to a time when greece was a nation of stone (and men wearing tweed jackets and smoking pipes). it has that old-world charm, with a refined atmosphere that oozes sophistication. its not for everyone, but its a lovely experience. even more, i highly recommend it if you like your hotels to be a little over the top. a romantic escape, that is for sure.
