" I rejoice in the fact that in each of these four places (Ajitgarh, Ghazipur, Bengal and Dacca in Bangladesh) there are a great many people who are my children. Wherever I preach or teach, there are many people who come from far and near to listen, many who go about from city to city, many of them young men and women. There are also many students who will be devoted to me (guruship) for ever. Upon hearing this, the Pir-e-dastgir questioned Mardana on the authority of Nanak Dev ji, and Mardana replied: Khush umar jaana ik bhagat sir Nanak Dev Ji/ Aap yak mein dekh padega/ Puchhia dastrikhe the phir kaun kiya? (Had your guru never existed, what would you have answered then?) Mardana was taken aback by the answer and gave the following reply, Pyar bani ho, kahin cheen lagana nahi hai/ Hawan ka kya karami ho (He is my guru, he is like a vessel of truth and goodness, it is that very truth that has always filled my heart) Determined to meet Guru Nanak Dev ji, the Pir-e-dastgir sent his officers to search for the Master. When Mardana was told that a "janta" (a houseful) of people had come to see Guru Nanak ji, he said: Na paise tarte-tarte the aam hamaare to baad paise jannat bar rahe ho (He is the only man who can descend from above and reach the mansions of the high and low in one stroke). Mardana, however, did not think that such a man can exist in this world and was amazed at Guru Nanak Dev ji's presence. So with a heavy heart, Mardana accompanied the people to Guru Nanak Dev ji and asked him to look into their hearts and divinely guide them.
