add-on teams up with the world leading 3d software vray to bring its vray for archicad functionality directly into archicad. when working in vray, you can work directly in archicad, or you can render a.vray file which is almost any format archicad supports. when archicad is working on your model, it will synchronize automatically to vray. in this way, you avoid having to keep track of file changes in the two separate programs. you can choose to render either to a.dxf file (edit format) or a.step file (3d printing format). vray export is currently available for blender, maya, and sketchup models. vray for archicad is a new version of the real-time rendering software from vray software gmbh. the vray for archicad plugin is no longer released under the gnu general public license (gpl). it is therefore no longer free for use in commercial projects. modimaker is a website where you can download 3d models in all the most common file formats for free. because these models are available in all three popular cad software, models for 3d building construction, design and engineering, all users can use these models. what is particularly cool about modimaker is that they have other websites as well, such as modimaker lawn & garden, where you can download different kinds of furniture, and even furniture from amazing movies and books, all for free. the 3d models can be downloaded in.3d,.i- and.stl format, or you can just download the model itself. when you download a model, you can choose which file format you want to use - for example, you can just download the.i- or.3d format model, or you can download the model in the.stl format. when you open the model you can easily change your mind, if you dont like the model, simply close it without saving your changes. in the modimaker site, you can also see which modimaker website users have access to the 3d models you have already downloaded, which is particularly useful, as it allows you to communicate with your friends.

on a final note, there are other 3d people websites out there such as avia3d which uses the same technology as renderpeople, but are also geared towards commercial work. the models on avia3d are higher resolution and are produced using a higher cost manufacturing process. if you have some experience with commercial 3d modelling, you might want to opt for a model produced using avia3d's 3d printer system; however, if you are starting out, i would suggest you wait to see what else becomes available as this technology matures. looking for more 3d people? here are a couple of articles worth checking out: using 3d people to enhance diversity of enscape visualizations and client communication - by lake flato creation of people for the architectural design environment using 3d modeling programs - by hiptek below is a link to a youtube video that i posted a while ago, on the subject of using 3d people in revit. i put a lot of research into this video and hope to be able to get a couple of people interested in creating some "real people" for use in their upcoming designs. h2>vray for archicad 16 free downlo if you are looking for a tutorial that does the whole process all at once, look no further. this is a short but excellent tutorial that walks through the entire process from creating the 3d person, to rendering the model. finally we have some extremely inspiring 3d renders made by insanityrender . if you are unfamiliar with the website, they have a free site to get you started. amazingly, the 3d models can be downloaded with no watermark! go check them out!
