I'm trying to detect a change in the value of a slider (or any other input type) in a script that runs in a WordPress plugin. I've been looking at wp_die() and wp_die() in particular and its suggested that I use it when changing a slider's value. I'm unsure how to implement it to suit my needs though. I'm using a plugin which allows me to change the number of rows in my slider. I want to be able to detect when a row is added, removed or if it resizes so that I can run a function to add another row. A: If you're going to use the wp_die() function, you should use it the way the developers intended. They use it in the case that the wp_die() function is called by an error, notice, warning or other signal from WordPress. See also: The second argument to wp_die() is a call back function. You can use that to run code when you detect a change, or any other event. For your specific problem, it might be sufficient to bind
